- The Center for Asian Studies is composed of more than 40 UCI faculty members representing five schools and 10 departments across campus who have a specialization in one or more of five Asian areas:

- China
- Japan
- Korea
- India
- Southeast Asia

- The center creates opportunities for students, faculty, and the community to explore Asian topics, conduct research in Asia, and develop advanced language skills

How are intergenerational experiences of diaspora impacting families in the Philippines? How have Chinese government interests impacted the privatization of China's economy? What is the current condition of the once optimistic monuments of the 1970 Worlds Exposition in Japan? What are the religious, ethnic and social meanings associated with wearing the veil by middle class Muslim women in Malaysia? CAS supports research projects that investigate these and other questions through field work all over Asia employing a wide range of disciplines and methodologies.

investigate

Innovative research projects have taken CAS researchers all over Asia, from the marshes of Bangkok to the experimental design works at the Shanghai Expo, leading to challenging new perspectives on the diverse problems and accomplishments of Asian cultures.

CAS sponsors or co-sponsors lectures, cultural programming and community outreach events on campus, and co-sponsors conferences, both at UCI and peer institutions. The annual Kiang Lecture is focused on Chinese politics and economics. The Chew-Liang Chinese Rural Development Research Program is a U.S.-China academic exchange program focused on the realities and challenges of rural development in China.
